

Deed of Settlement

BETWEEN THE CROWN AND TE ĀKITAI WAIOHUA

General background

Te Ākitai Waiohua is an iwi whose area of interest centres on Māngere and the wider South Auckland area. Te Ākitai Waiohua's principal marae, Pūkaki, is located near Auckland Airport in Māngere on the shores of the Manukau Harbour. Te Ākitai Waiohua also claim customary interests across a wider area extending from the Waikato River in the south to the Whangaparoa Peninsula and Kaipara Harbour in the north.

Te Ākitai Waiohua are a beneficiary of the Waikato Raupatu Claims Settlement Act 1995 and the Waikato-Tainui Raupatu Claims (Waikato River) Settlement Act 2010. Te Ākitai Waiohua are also a party to the Ngā Mana Whenua o Tāmaki Makaurau Collective Redress Act 2014.

In July 2011, the Crown recognised the mandate of Te Ākitai Waiohua Iwi Authority to negotiate a comprehensive settlement of the historical Treaty of Waitangi claims of Te Ākitai Waiohua.

The Crown signed Terms of Negotiation with Te Ākitai Waiohua in December 2012. On 16 December 2016, the Crown and Te Ākitai Waiohua signed an Agreement in Principle, which formed the basis for this settlement.

On 23 December 2020 Te Ākitai Waiohua and the Crown initialled a deed of settlement. The deed was ratified by Te Ākitai Waiohua members and signed on 12 November 2021. The deed of settlement is conditional on the enactment of the settlement legislation.

Te Arawhiti, with the support of the Department of Conservation, Land Information New Zealand, and other government agencies, represented the Crown in day-to-day negotiations.

The Minister for Treaty of Waitangi Negotiations, the Hon Andrew Little (and his predecessor the Hon Christopher Finlayson), represented the Crown in high-level negotiations with Te Ākitai Waiohua.

Summary of the historical background to the claims

Before the signing of Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi, Te Ākitai Waiohua engaged in transactions with Pākehā settlers to establish peaceful occupation and use of the Tāmaki and Waimai Blocks. Crown-appointed Old Land Commissioners investigated the pre-Treaty transactions and it was found the Crown took approximately 75,900 acres of both blocks as 'surplus'. None of this 'surplus' was returned to Te Ākitai Waiohua, despite an agreement with the settler for the return of a large portion of the Tāmaki block.

The Crown continued to purchase land within the Te Ākitai Waiohua rohe but did not always account for Te Ākitai Waiohua interests in land when it conducted transactions with other iwi. Instead, the Crown presented the transaction to Te Ākitai Waiohua as a completed purchase, providing Te Ākitai Waiohua with no opportunity to retain the land. By the end of 1854, the Crown had purchased all Te Ākitai Waiohua land in the Manukau area, aside from a handful of small reserves. Te Ākitai Waiohua's experience of land transactions with the Crown led them to become supporters of the Kīngitanga after the movement began in 1858.

Although Te Ākitai Waiohua remained friendly with Pākehā, the Crown increasingly began to perceive the Kīngitanga as a challenge to its authority. In July 1863, as the Crown prepared to invade the Waikato, it issued a proclamation requiring Māori in the South Auckland region to swear an oath of allegiance or to vacate their settlements. Most Te Ākitai Waiohua began to leave, gathering at Kirikiri on the road to the Waikato. This group included Te Ākitai Waiohua rangatira Mohi te Ahi a te Ngu and Ihaka Takaanini. A Crown official visited the pā at Kirikiri, where he was told that Ihaka had understood the proclamation as an order to leave. Once told that they could stay if they swore an oath of allegiance to the Crown, Mohi refused, but Ihaka agreed to take the oath. However, before he could do so, the Governor ordered their arrest. Mohi and a party of 80 men escaped into the bush but Ihaka was captured, along with 22 others.

The prisoners were held in military custody for over four months without charge or trial. Conditions were harsh and Ihaka's father and two of his children died while in custody. The Attorney-General advised that there were insufficient grounds for charging Ihaka, but the prisoners remained in custody due to fears that their release would compromise the Crown. Eventually they were moved to the island of Rakino (north-east of Motutapu Island in the Hauraki Gulf) and released. Ihaka Takaanini died a short time after his arrival on the island.

The Crown undertook extensive confiscation of Te Ākitai Waiohua land under the New Zealand Settlements Act 1863. Some members of Te Ākitai Waiohua were able to claim compensation for their confiscated land, but others, unfairly labelled as rebels by the Crown, were unable to do so.

By 1880 Te Ākitai Waiohua was virtually landless. The iwi rebuilt a community on 50 acres of land at Pūkaki, which had been awarded to Ihaka Takaanini's widow, Riria, by the Compensation Court in 1866. However, the small landholding was insufficient to meet the needs of the community. Many lived in poor conditions and experienced discrimination from the wider Pukekohe community. Repeated efforts in the 1940s and 1950s to have the land defined as a reserve failed. By 1985, only 7.8 acres of Te Ākitai Waiohua's former lands remained in their ownership.

Overview

Te Ākitai Waiohūa's Deed of Settlement will be the final settlement of Te Ākitai Waiohūa's historical Treaty of Waitangi claims resulting from acts or omissions by the Crown before 21 September 1992, and is made up of a package that includes:

- an agreed historical account, Crown acknowledgments and apology;
- cultural redress; and
- financial and commercial redress.

The benefits of the settlement will be available to all members of Te Ākitai Waiohūa wherever they may live.

Crown acknowledgements and apology

The deed of settlement contains acknowledgements that historical Crown actions or omissions caused prejudice to Te Ākitai Waiohūa or breached Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and its principles.

The deed of settlement also includes a Crown apology to Te Ākitai Waiohūa for its acts and omissions that breached Crown obligations under Te Tiriti o Waitangi/the Treaty of Waitangi and the resulting damages to Te Ākitai Waiohūa. This includes an apology for the manner in which the Crown conducted purchases of Te Ākitai Waiohūa land and for not returning the surplus that was taken during a private transaction. The Crown also apologises for the treatment of members of Te Ākitai Waiohūa as rebels, confiscating lands and forcing Te Ākitai Waiohūa from their lands, as well as the imprisonment without good cause of many Te Ākitai Waiohūa rangatira. The Crown's apology acknowledges that these acts have led to the virtual landlessness of Te Ākitai Waiohūa as well as hindered socio-economic development of Te Ākitai Waiohūa as an iwi.

- an agreed historical account;
- cultural redress, including the return of seven sites throughout Te Ākitai Waiohū's area of interest;

2. Is there any private land involved?

No.

3. Are the public's rights affected?

In general, all existing public access rights in relation to areas affected by the settlement will be preserved.

4. Are any of the place names changed?

Yes, please refer to clauses 5.31 and 5.33 of Te Ākitai Waiohū's Deed of Settlement.

5. What are statutory acknowledgements?

Statutory acknowledgements acknowledge areas or sites with which iwi have a special relationship, and will be recognised in any relevant proceedings under the Resource Management Act 1991. These provisions aim to avoid past problems where areas of significance to Māori, such as burial grounds, were simply cleared or excavated for public works or similar purposes without permission or consultation with iwi. Statutory acknowledgements do not convey a property right and are non-exclusive.

6. What happens to memorials on private titles?

The legislative restrictions (memorials) placed on the title of Crown properties and some former Crown properties now in private ownership will be removed once all Treaty claims in the area have been settled.

7. When will the settlement take effect?

The settlement will take effect following the enactment of the settlement legislation.

8. Does Te Ākitai Waiohū have the right to come back and make further claims about the behaviour of the Crown in the 19th and 20th centuries?

No. When the deed is signed and settlement legislation is passed, it will be a final and comprehensive settlement of all historical (relating to events before 21 September 1992) Treaty of Waitangi claims of Te Ākitai Waiohū. The settlement legislation, once passed, will prevent the iwi re-litigating the claim before the Waitangi Tribunal or the courts.

The settlement will still allow Te Ākitai Waiohū to pursue claims against the Crown for acts or omissions after 21 September 1992, including claims based on the continued existence of aboriginal title of customary rights. The Crown also retains the right to dispute such claims or the existence of such title rights.

9. Who benefits from the settlement?

All members of Te Ākitai Waiohū wherever they may now live.
